

To whom it may concern: It has been my understanding for years that the federal government and it's agencies have never undermined the authority of the workings of the state and it's agency.

I was so tired of getting 4 or 5 calls in just one night from telemarketers. I didn't know where to turn. Then the state of Indiana government let me know about this list I can go on to stop in state telemarketers. Since joining this list, I get maybe one or two calls a month. I enjoy the peace. I have a telephone so maybe my family, who lives in MD, can reach me. I have a telephone to reach friends, family, and work. I don't have a telephone so businesses and scammers can try and contact me day after day.

The federal government is supposed to be looking out for my welfare. By allowing businesses and scammers to call my home isn't looking out for my well being. If I want a service, I can look a business up in the phone book and call them. I don't need or want them calling me. Indiana's law at the present time is looking out for my general welfare. Don't undermine them.

Deborah Roper